I spoke with the complainant. She stated that she can't park in front of her home, there are liquor bottles and trash, including needles, all over the neighborhood, and gambling will make the situation worse. "These people have no respect for our neighborhood."

Does the word "no" rise to ban objection when they don't give a reason for concern which would necessitate the need for a public hearing?

What exactly would we be discussing at the hearing other than the word "no"?
