Councilmember Carter noted that a number of Council members were wearing hooded sweatshirts in recognition of the Trayvon Martin case in Florida, and he expressed hope that truth, due process, and justice were achieved. He said the situation was a reminder that attitudes and beliefs based on physical appearances still existed, and while they might not be as overt in Minnesota, they were manifested in other ways and were just as destructive. He invited those interested to take part in a rally the following day, and stressed the importance of being cognizant of one's own attitudes, beliefs and prejudices and of guarding against their outward manifestation.
