LEGISLATIVE HEARING DISCUSSION ITEM

41 RLH RSA 23-6 Appeal of Gaius Poehler to a Rent Stabilization Determination at 476
HERSCHEL STREET, Apt. 10

Appeal denied.

Also in attendance: Gaius Poehler, appellant

Marcia Moermond: Legislative Hearing Officer: This appeal is of a determination made by the Department of Safety and Inspections (DSI) that this building does qualify for a rent increase of 3% to 8%, which was asked for through the self certification process online. That's more-or-less an automated process that involves minimal staff review. That application was received on March 21st, and I would note that last week I talked about a problem having the wrong form on the website, that they were using the previous year's form. This application was made in March, and still the wrong form was on the website. The numbers we're talking about today are once again 2019 numbers compared to 2021 numbers. We do not have the 2022 numbers in front of us. I'm using the old numbers that were asked for and used in the application. In a separate analysis when staff looked into the review, their finding was that this building would actually qualify for a 13.1% increase. This is what they would be allowed using the old numbers. The unit that you are looking at today has an increase above the 3% rent cap rent. That proposal is 3.2% for this particular unit. The rent change is from $899 to $928. That comes up to 3.2%. That is for a 12 month lease. Were the tenant to pursue a month to month lease, there would be an administrative charge attached that would be taking the entire total of all the fees and the rent to approximately a 6% increase. This is still below the 8% number. A question came up in the course of the hearing that if a month to month lease were pursued there could be potential for increases along the way that could exceed the 8% of those minor increases throughout the year. The answer is: No, there could not be those increases. They would have been approved for 8% for the entire year, even if there's minor adjustments along the way in that particular lease. What I will say is that this is a Class A property. There are no known code violations and the primary drivers which we know exist for the increase in rent are property taxes and the Consumer Price Index. The Consumer Price index for this application was 6.5%. If it had been current, the application would then have been 13.95%. With the staff analysis saying they qualified for 13.1% with the old numbers, the new numbers would have shown an even higher allowed number. In the course of the hearing, the tenant articulated a handful of reasons that he believed that a rent increase was not appropriate for this particular unit. First is that he was disappointed in what he understood to be an agreement with management that there would be no rent increase from his current lease into his next. There was actually a proposed increase. He also mentioned that he believed that a recent settlement agreement between Housing Hub and the Minnesota Attorney General's office played a significant role in the request to increase the rent. We did discuss that thoroughly. A 3rd reason is that he believed there were significant code violations. Again, this is a Category A building. The code violation he mentioned most specifically has to do with the lack of heat for a 24-hour time period in which space heaters needed to be provided, and then the heat was corrected. According to his testimony, he also mentioned how fees were charged, regarding being included in rent versus charged separately. In ordinance, it's the same group of things counted together, no matter if it's billed separately or not. The staff analysis does come out the same, even if it's bill out separately. There was a question about whether or not it was allowed for those to be charged separately. And the answer is: Yes, as long as the total amount isn't changed above that 3% to 8% applied for. The role of the settlement with the Attorney General, I believe that it's a cost of doing business and that it is legitimately incorporated into the costs. In the same fashion, if I were to fill out my taxes incorrectly and be audited, I may be subject to penalties and interest for that. That's a cost. I did it wrong and it needs to be it corrected. And it is a part of the expense of operating. We are again looking at a significant differential between what would be allowed and what's being asked for if the tenant signs a 12-month lease. The 3.2% increase and the month to month lease which would have special fees to be closer to 6% are both below the 8% applied for an allowed. Had they gone through staff determination it could have been higher.

Council President Brendmoen: I believe you said that the property with proper numbers would be qualified up to 13% increase. The increase being requested is 3.2%, 0.2% above what is allowed by right. If it was a month to month, it could go to about a 6% increase, because of the administrative costs that are added.

Moermond: Changing the type of lease that's used does add that administrative fee.

Brendmoen: And you mentioned that fees are part of rent, so that would be included.

Moermond: For example, if garbage is charged out separately but used to be included as part of rent, the staff analysis would say garbage is a housing service, counting it as a part of the increase in costs.

Brendmoen: I appreciate that. It's something that we paid special attention to with the amendments to that ordinance and making sure that any additional fees are still considered cost of rent.

Gaius Poehler: I think Moermond's recommendation is wrong. Saint Paul and other city governments are no not regulating, but instead partnering with property companies whose selfish business interests compromise the fair and healthy treatment of tenants living in their buildings. Even rating organizations like the Better Business Bureau, which gave Herschel Apartments LLC an A rating, don't accurately reflect the business practices of said property companies. Throughout the May 22, 2023, appeal hearing, Moermond was on the side of the property owner. She was demonstrating that she is an extension of the property company, instead of an independent objective regulator. For example: the property management company Housing Hub's non-adherence to Herschel Apartments own written month-to-month lease, their not providing sufficient heat, and maintenance not being performed by staff. See evidence of this in the attachments. I could use this, but I would like to give you the attachments if I could. I know you're voting on this today, but I just want to leave it for the record, if that's okay. I'll conclude by saying the City of Saint Paul's public contention Rent Stabilization Appeal Hearings provide forum for reviewing appeals of Department of Safety Inspections (DSI) determinations on applications for an exception to the City's 3% rent increase cap is an accurate statement. The rent stabilization hearings are merely the City of Saint Paul's directive from the property companies that they partner with to present an image of tenant consideration, when, in fact, the City has been directed by said property companies and has no intention of granting an appeal to the 3% rent cap exception. I think some of the figures Moermond was mentioning are not accurate based on my information. In these records here, it will show that there was direct correspondence to me to assure me that I was not going to have my rent raised. They did raise it literally a day before I was to have the hearing. That concludes my testimony. I have additional documents here to give to somebody.

Councilmember Jalali moved to close the public hearing. Approved 7-0.

Councilmember Jalali: I was trying to keep notes on what you're saying and I have a follow-up question. You mentioned there's a number like practices and things related to the property's management that you had concerns about. I heard maintenance not performed and was just trying to keep up with because you were speaking so fast. Would you mind just playing back that part? Please describe property management issues you're experiencing. They're not governed by the same rules as the Rent Stabilization Review process, but they're part of how you're experiencing housing. I'd like to understand that better is part of our response.

Poehler: I've lived there for about 26 years. Throughout that time, there's been variances to how much attention is paid to keep the building running. When this company took over, because I don't want to live in a place that's falling apart, I spent a lot of my own time trying to make up for things that don't get done. There's still a big hole in somebody's window that they never fixed. I've taken pictures of it. It's in the record. I just felt I had to come up here and talk about it because at least it's in the record, even if it's not going to be voted on. I think that the conditions there are not abysmal, but they certainly are not great. They don't have a caretaker. Because I live there, I don't want the place to fall apart. I do things on my own, kind of a regular basis every day. I'm not paid any money for that. In fact, now they're raising my rent. The attachments show the details of that. It's continued on since they took over the company. Those are some examples. I have to kind of pull teeth to try to ask them to fix stuff. A cute one was where the heat wasn't there for 24 hours. I actually didn't feel very good that night but had to try to get through it. It was my space heater. They didn't provide a space heater. I had used my own. It's my bill, my money. If we're talking about money, I think there's something more to this than just money. It's the conditions, feelings, and safety for the tenants. Money is not everything. Maybe to a company, but it's not certainly the case for the people that are just trying to feel comfortable in their living space. I'm generalizing, but that's the overall feeling. Now they want to raise more rent.

Jalali: This is a Housing Hub property?

Poehler: It's called Herschel Properties, LLC. They are also the owner of their management company called Housing Hub, who also staffs. When you put in the maintenance requests on their website to come out and fix things, the two owners of both companies decide as to whether we're going to be charged. They determine if we're responsible for it as tenants or not. I'm very careful about everything I do because I feel like am I going to get charged. One time the drain was clogged with hair and that they charged us for that. I changed the kind of shampoo I use so I don't have a chance of that again. It's not just about a ledger and saving money. It's about the feeling of the tenants. I've spoken to other tenants who complain about things, and who've since moved out. That's something I consider doing. I like the neighborhood. It's convenient for me.

Jalali: I appreciate you answering my question. This is been helpful for me. I have spent time studying this case to understand the picture of what rules apply to this. I guess I would start by saying I think that what you're bringing up is an example of how a landlord could go through a process and make and substantiate a case about how they can qualify for an exception. What's not being captured within that, though, is how there are costs that you're taking on simply because the quality or condition of the basic pieces of the unit isn't where it should be. I want you to know that I see and understand that the rules that govern whether landlord can get an exception are about the information they present. That gets reviewed to show the reasonable return on investment standard that they have to qualify for. And it's my understanding they have qualified for more than what they could be getting, and that they're doing an incremental increase. The way that I have to make this determination is: has that information been substantiated? In this case, I see that it has. But that doesn't mean that this limit is fulfilling the obligation to you. I actually paid extra attention to this case because of Housing Hub's poor reputation in the community long before the Attorney General had even successfully won like $63,000 from them for things like charging renters for carpet cleaning, replacing batteries, light bulb, filters. I hope you can see that. I want to more closely involve myself and my office in supporting you with some of the management issues that are going on at your site, because those things should not have to be borne by you. What I'll do is I will move the recommendation of the hearing officer, which is on tonight's appeal. But I would like to make sure that you are connected with my staff from here on out so that we can actually hold them accountable to the other rules that regulate the things that you're describing. That's making sure that they're doing what they need to do under the Department of Safety Inspections. There are rights that you have under our city laws, separate from rent stabilization, like requesting an inspection. We regularly ask for inspections for renters who reach out to us because their landlord is unresponsive or taking too long, functionally denying them a part of their housing experience because they just don't do minor repairs. I would like for you to have some additional support around that, so that your situation improves. My legislative aide Doua Yang is here. I'm going to make sure that you all have each other's connection and I'll follow-up to chat with you after this, so that we're handling all of the matters that we can. I think that in general, we need to be looking at and evaluating: How is this new appeals process working? Clearly there are going to be exceptions that are granted, but the tenants still have other issues they're experiencing or there's a another side to the story that the rules are not capturing enough to enforce the type of decisions that I would like to be making. I want you to know that from policy level, I'm looking into that. I wanted to just round out how all that fits together. What I'd like to do is, you can chat with Doua right away, and then once we get to the end of our agenda, if I'm still here and you're still here we can touch base to chat more.

Brendmoen: I appreciate the distinction between the matter in front of us and the larger matter of the services provided.

Moermond: I just wanted to, because I have to, summarize for the record, the additional information that's been provided. A lot of what's here is attached to the appeal document, which is the first attachment within the record. There is an attachment of the correspondence that's given the decision and the back and forth on scheduling and so on. There's summary information from the city's website as to how to apply for the exception to rent cap. There are some additional photographs of violations like some garbage bags in the window and so on, which was discussed. In the not too distant future, you'll see another Housing Hub appeal.
